Our multicultural city

If one listened to the news all the time one could get a very dismal point of view about the world today and become largely despondent. There's little doubt as one story after another points out the horrors and the inadequacies of the global reality that the human experience has room for growth and that outrageous suffering is endured by millions.

Here in New York, however, we are better off in so many ways, starting from the basic fact that we are a pluralistic society that becomes only more so with each passing day. Not that it's perfect here, and we have loads of issues to deal with and to improve, but it's my contention that if you take warring peoples from far away and bring them here to Coney Island Avenue or the Grand Concourse or Victory Boulevard or Steinway Street or the Lower East Side, they will go into business together and find their brotherhood and commonality.

This is the great beauty of our complex multicultural city and most of the time there is great beauty and one finds displays of human kindness here and sensitivity that surprise the false impression that we are a rude bunch with no manners and a lack of caring.

Raising children in New York City is a breeze actually compared to the isolation of some of the suburbs and/or a rural world where there is less stimulation and far less contact with others.

Our children are sharper, more astute and more worldly. They are more at ease with differences and thrive because of them. They become creative and sophisticated in ways that are copied by every major industry. The fashion world looks to our street kids to find the next wave and the music is created often on those streets, just a few of the trend setting examples of young influence coming out of our neighborhoods.

Life isn't perfect, but human contact is key to the transition from barbarism to conflict resolution.

As New York parents we must provide our children with as much contact as possible because the opportunity here is profound. Meet your neighbors, get involved in the parent association and make sure your children's day to day world is inclusive. Only by knowing each other can the future society rid itself of ancient grudges, vendettas and prejudice.

Happy New Year! Thanks for reading.

PEACE ON EARTH

Tips for choosing, promoting and teaching peace in your life

BY CAROLYN WATERBURY-TIEMAN

Pace, as with most aspects of the human condition, is a choice. It may not be obvious or even conscious, but it is always an option. For every instance or occasion when cruelty, abuse, or violence occurs, a more peaceful solution existed.

The thing about peace, though, is that it is hard. It typically requires giving something up — having the last word, making a point, believing your way is the right way, winning at any cost, or getting what you want. There are even those who have given up their lives in the pursuit of peace. Peace is not compatible with selfishness, competitiveness, prejudice, or arrogance. These obstacles to peace grow out of vulnerability, fear, ignorance, and insecurity.

Peace requires personal discipline, courage, patience, tolerance, and grace. An essential prerequisite for peace is empathy — as Atticus Finch explains to Scout in “To Kill a Mockingbird,” “You never really understand a person until you consider things from his point of view, until you climb into his skin and walk around in it.” When we can look into the eyes of others and see all the ways they are like us rather than the ways they are different, we are primed for peace. When we accept the equality of all humankind, we can promote peace.

Unfortunately, we are living in a time when being kind, polite, considerate, decent, respectful, and peace-seeking is not “in.” These qualities are not considered sophisticated, edgy, or trendy. Those observed exhibiting these characteristics are scorned for their naivete and assumed lack of worldliness. But these individuals are not strangers to controversy and conflict. For peace is not merely the absence of conflict. Peace is both the means as well as the desired end of conflict resolution.

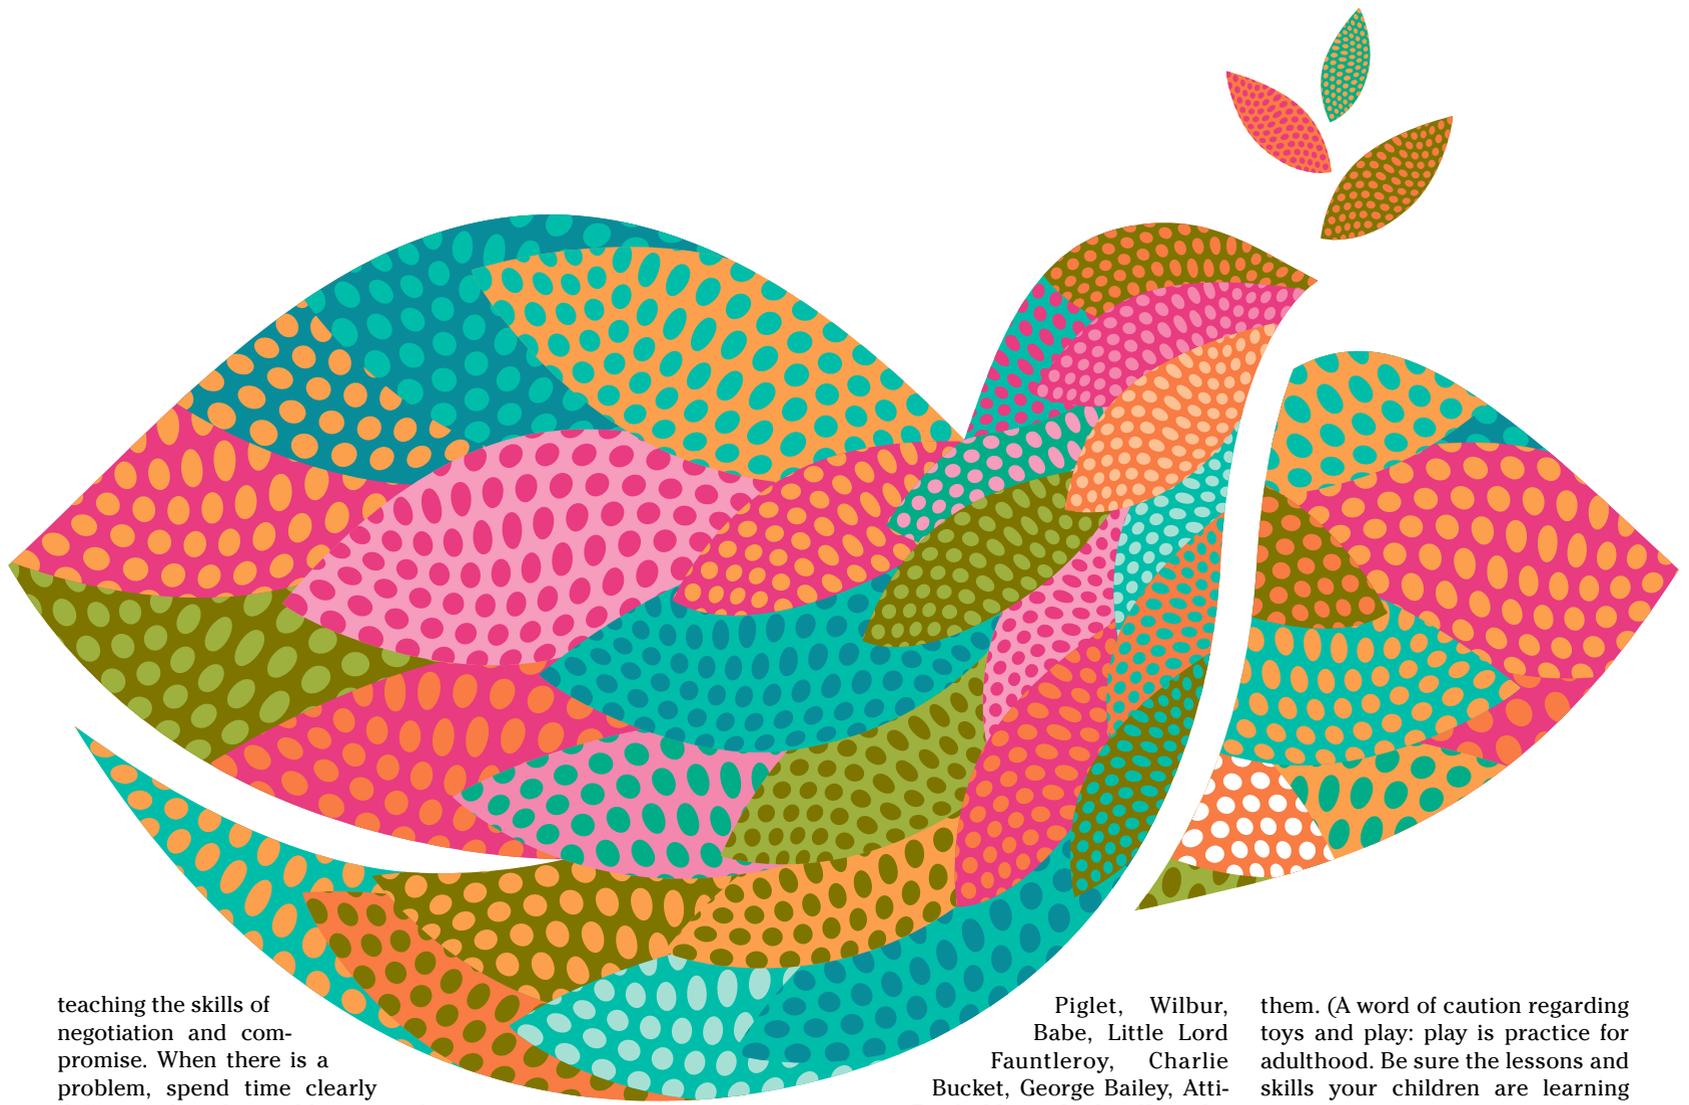

Eleanor Roosevelt said, “It isn’t enough to talk about peace. One must believe in it. And it isn’t enough to believe in it. One must work at it.” How do we choose peace? What can we do to promote peace in our lives? How do we teach our children peace? Here are a few suggestions for how we can be models of peace in our families, for home is where peace begins:

Study peace. Familiarize yourself with the meaning of peace. Explore the lives of those you would describe as peaceful individuals. Identify those qualities and practices that exemplify peace. Decide what peace means to you. Evaluate your position on it. Choose words and actions that reflect your beliefs. Share your position with the other significant adults in your child’s life. Develop a plan for peace.

Practice peaceful communication. Remember: communication includes listening as well as speaking, so listen carefully to what others say. Listening does not mean you agree, approve, or give permission. It just means you are listening. Try to identify the feelings behind others’ words. Try getting “into their skin.” Increase your peaceful vocabulary. Think before you speak. Ask yourself how you would feel if someone said to you what you are about to say. Speak without raising your voice. Learn to be honest in a way that expresses caring and concern. It is possible to be honest without being cruel. Make saying something kind a habit. Keep a smile close at hand.

Seek peaceful solutions to conflict. Share the plan for peace with your family. Discuss what the expectations are for resolving conflict peacefully. Spend time learning and teaching the skills of negotiation and compromise. When there is a problem, spend time clearly defining what the problem is and who is involved. Include all family members in the peace process, when appropriate. Create an atmosphere of trust among family members. Empower family members with the courage to take responsibility for their words and actions as well as the consequences. Take responsibility for whatever part you have played in starting or continuing an argument. Apologize if you have said or done things that have caused another pain. Explore alternatives to unacceptable behavior. Expect everyone to cooperate in instituting the agreed upon peaceful solution. Look for common ground. You are a family. You love each other. That's a good place to start.

Employ peace-compatible discipline. Adopt a preventive approach to discipline. Be sure expectations for behavior are age-appropriate, clear, and understood ahead of time. Be sure consequences are also age-appropriate, related to the offense, consistent, and occur in a timely manner. Whenever possible, make consequences for failure to comply clear ahead of time.

Instead of telling your children what they can't do, try telling them what they can do. Make compliance and cooperation more desirable than misbehavior by expressing appreciation when they occur. We — children, too — tend to respond more favorably to fans than to critics. In her book, "Positive Parenting," Jane Nelsen reminds us, "Our children do not have to be made to feel worse in order to do better." Remember that you — your time, attention, approval, and affection — are your child's greatest reward.

Provide age-appropriate models for peace. In addition to modeling peace for your children, point out examples in the world around them with whom they can identify. Introduce them to age-appropriate role models from sources such as history and literature. Knowing that others their age have made peaceful choices in difficult situations can inspire and encourage them when they face the inevitable challenges to peace. (Some of our favorites are Winnie the Pooh and

Choose peaceful forms of entertainment. Pay close attention to the messages your children are getting about relationships, conflict, violence, and peace from television, movies, toys, games, music, and literature. When the messages they are getting go against the values you are trying to teach, speak up! (If you do not believe your children are influenced by what they are watching and listening to, then why do companies spend billions of dollars on advertising? Don't fool yourself. Take control of the influences on your children's lives.)

Take advantage of the opportunity to explain your views regarding what constitutes acceptable and unacceptable messages and behavior. Engage your children in a dialogue about how situations could be addressed in a more peaceful manner. Make it clear how you would expect them to behave in a similar situation. If there are shows, movies, or toys that do not meet with your approval, refuse to let them be viewed — refuse to buy them. (A word of caution regarding toys and play: play is practice for adulthood. Be sure the lessons and skills your children are learning will be useful to them as peace-seeking adults.) Take the time to explain your position.

Have the courage to make unpopular decisions. After all, we expect our children to do so when they are pressured to participate in bullying, alcohol, drugs, or promiscuity. Practice the peace you preach.

If you fall short of your efforts, forgive yourself, make amends, and try again. Peace is worth it. There is a beautiful song, composed by Sy Miller and Bill Jackson, that proclaims, "Let there be peace on Earth, and let it begin with me." Imagine what might happen if each of us made this our New Year's resolution? Peace be with you.

on eye health

How to know if your child
needs glasses

BY ALLISON PLITT

Every parent should be on the lookout for potential problems with her child's health, and vision impairment is no exception. Marc Weinstein, who worked as the Optometric Director for various New York locations of Macy's Vision Express, gives parents some guidelines to help them evaluate their child's vision.

Although all pediatricians offer some type of vision testing, Weinstein refers to the recommendations of the American Optometric Association, which represents 39,000 professionals in the field of optometry in the United States. According to the Association, the first eye exam a child should have is by 6 months of age, which consists of a general evaluation that's done to assess the overall health and alignment of the eyes.

Subsequently, the Association typically recommends a second exam at age 3, when the child is able to give some responses. The first full exam for a child will happen usually before first grade. If the child's eyes are healthy, then he will need an eye exam every two years after that.

“If the child doesn’t like the eyeglasses, he’s not going to want to wear them. If he doesn’t wear them, then this defeats the purpose.”

“At the end of the day, children’s performance in school is highly dependent on their vision,” Weinstein says. “If you notice that your child is having difficulty in school, or if they’re complaining that they’re rubbing their eyes a lot, or if they’re complaining that they’re having trouble seeing the board, it’s really important to take them in for a full eye exam.”

A full eye exam should also include a dilated exam, which is when the optometrist puts drops in the eye to dilate the pupil. This allows the doctor to look in the back of the eye and check for any possible conditions that could be causing a decrease in vision.

Weinstein stresses the necessity of the dilated exam.

“Even though people might say, ‘My kid is young and healthy,’ it’s a really important exam to have done on your child,” Weinstein explains. “It gives the doctor baseline measurements, so if anything does change in the future, they can reference previous exams and see what changes have taken place.”

For parents with children who have eyeglasses, Weinstein advises, “Make sure your kid really likes the eyeglasses. At the end of the day, no matter what we all do as professionals and as parents, if the child doesn’t like the eyeglasses, he’s not going to want to wear them. If he doesn’t wear them, then this defeats the purpose.”

Weinstein encourages parents to “really engage their child in the process of choosing the right pair of eyeglasses. Make sure they get something that they really want to wear. Going beyond that, make sure, obviously, that the eyeglasses fit well, that they’re not too loose or too tight, that they’re comfortable for the child.”

As Weinstein advises, an important component for children’s eyewear is that all eyeglasses should always have polycarbonate lenses.

“Polycarbonate is a type of lens. It’s shatter-resistant material,” Weinstein explains. “It includes scratching and ultraviolet protection built into the lens. You shouldn’t have to pay extra for that. It protects the child’s eye, and it’s also 30 percent lighter and thinner than standard glasses.”

If your children wear prescription eyewear, Weinstein recommends that he should also have a pair of prescription sunglasses.

“People might not realize this, but even at a very young age, exposure to the sun does put us at a higher risk in the future, for things like cataracts,” he warns. “So it’s very important, even at an early age, to wear protective eyewear for the sun.”

Weinstein is the CEO and founder of a company called 39DollarGlasses.com, a website where people can buy glasses for toddlers to adults for only $39 a pair. Not only does the company provide quality and affordable eyewear, but they work with non-profit organizations to provide free eyewear to children in public schools.

Explaining his charitable work, Weinstein adds, “A lot of times, even when people have vision insurance, if the child loses or breaks the eyeglasses, they don’t have coverage for a second pair. Even if the child did get one pair, if there’s a problem, and children do frequently break or lose their eyeglasses, they need another pair and the parents can’t afford it. That’s where the kids fall through the cracks.”

Weinstein’s 39DollarGlasses.com goes even further to help families who are struggling financially.

“We reach out to schools all over the country, and we try to provide free eyewear for children whose families can’t afford it,” says Weinstein. “The company pays for the eyeglasses directly from its own profits.”

Kids Night on Broadway is a great intro for little folks

BY SHNIEKA L. JOHNSON

As a parent, you have to decide the right age for your child to experience his first live theater show. Kids Night on Broadway offers the perfect opportunity to see if your child is ready. Hosted by the Broadway League, the 19th annual Kids Night on Broadway provides parents a chance to expose their kids to this sector of the performing arts. It will take place between Friday, Jan. 9, and Thursday, Jan. 15, and kids between the ages of 6 and 18 can see Broadway shows for free when accompanied by a full-paying adult. As a bonus, a Kids Night On Broadway ticket includes restaurant discounts and educational programs for individual shows, such as activity and study guides.

This event was created in order to introduce young people to live theater and make Broadway accessible to young theater-goers. Kids Night on Broadway is not just happening in New York, but all over the country. Select shows currently touring the United States are offering nights in various cities to welcome young people to Broadway-style shows for free. Kids Night On Broadway is presented by The New York Times and is sponsored by WABC-TV with additional support from KidzVuz and Z100. Tony Award-winning actress Judith Light will serve as the National Ambassador for the 2015 Kids Night on Broadway.

Participating shows include:

“A Gentleman’s Guide to Love and Murder”

“Chicago”

<http://chicagothemusical.com>, Ambassador Theatre, 219 W. 49th St.

There’s never been a better time to experience “Chicago,” Broadway’s razzle-dazzle smash. A sensational tale of sin, corruption, and all that jazz, “Chicago” has everything you could want in a musical: knockout dancing, an edge-of-your-seat story, and one showstopper after another.

“The Curious Incident of the Dog in the Night-Time”

<http://curiousonbroadway.com>,

Ethel Barrymore Theatre, 243 W. 47th St.

Fifteen-year-old Christopher has an extraordinary brain; he is exceptionally intelligent but ill-equipped to interpret everyday life. When he falls under suspicion for killing his neighbor’s dog, he sets out to identify the true culprit, which leads to an earth-shattering discovery and a journey that will change his life forever.

“Honeymoon in Vegas”

"The Phantom of the Opera" is based on the novel by Gaston Leroux. It tells the story of the hideously deformed Phantom who lurks beneath the stage of the Paris Opera, exercising a reign of terror over its occupants.

"Rock of Ages"

www.rockofagesmusical.com, Helen Hayes Theatre, 240 W. 44th St.

This explosive musical takes audiences on a joyride set to blazing hits from iconic 1980s rockers such as Journey, Bon Jovi, Styx, Reo Speedwagon, Pat Benatar, Twisted Sister, Poison, Asia, Whitesnake and many more.

"Wicked"

www.WickedTheMusical.com, George Gershwin Theatre, 222 W. 51st St.

Long before Dorothy drops in, two other girls meet in the land of Oz. One, born with emerald-green skin, is smart, fiery, and misunderstood. The other is beautiful, ambitious, and very popular.

"You Can't Take It With You"

<http://youcanttakeitwithyoubroadway.com>, Longacre Theatre, 220 W. 48th St.

James Earl Jones plays wily Grandpa Vanderhof, leader of a happily eccentric gang of snake collectors, cunning revolutionaries, ballet dancers, and skyrocket makers. But when the youngest daughter brings her fiancé and his buttoned-up parents over for dinner, that's when the real fireworks start to fly.

Cut the mean girls out of your circle

Do you have a toxic friend? If you are a woman, chances are you have had a toxic friend, and surprisingly, you may have kept that friendship for a while. Self Magazine and Today.com asked 18,000 readers about their experiences with toxic friends. 84 percent of women said they'd had a toxic friend at some point, and 1 in 3 surveyed said they had a toxic best friend.

The disturbing part is that 83 percent said they had held onto a friendship longer than was healthy simply because it was hard to break up with that friend. Yet a dysfunctional relationship is still dysfunctional, even if it is between two female friends, so why is it so difficult to end the friendship?

"The reason it's hard to dump a toxic friend is the same reason people stay in all kinds of dysfunctional relationships," says Dr. Gail Saltz, associate professor of psychiatry at New York Presbyterian Hospital. "There's something in it that you find compelling or familiar. Depending on the nature of what's going on in the relationship, you may feel guilty [about breaking things off]. Or it could be that the person has implied you need them in some way — that you would be a bad person to walk away."

It's worth noting that women's friendships are centered on feelings where as men's friendships mostly focus on joint activities and business. Some of the toxic friendship types include those who are chronic downers, self absorbed, overly critical, undermining, and unreliable.

The popular movie, Mean Girls that focuses on high school social cliques and the detrimental effect they can have on girls, reflects not only high school. Unfortunately often cliques form in elementary and middle school, and continue into adulthood, in friendship circles, family get-togethers and even the workplace.

What we should teach our young girls is that if anyone treats them poorly on a consistent basis, they probably shouldn't be their friend.

Furthermore, they shouldn't feel bad for ending a friendship; they should feel empowered for protecting themselves. Of course, most of us don't want to be intentionally mean, but setting boundaries for what you accept from others is one of the very most important ways you can teach your kids self-love.

I am just now learning how to do this over the past few years. Growing up, I was always taught to be polite, help others, and extend yourself, which are all good things. It's just that I never learned how to set boundaries for myself or even realize when I was being taken for advantage in my friendships, and being helpful can quickly turn into being an easy target. It's amazing how many of us can recognize when a boyfriend or a boss is being insincere or sneaky, but don't immediately see it in our girlfriends.

The ironic part is that my friends, my best friends in adulthood, have showed me through example how to be set boundaries without being mean and how to cut off those female friends who are there for the wrong reasons, or in other words, toxic. It's the most freeing thing I've done. Have you had a toxic friend? Did you stay friends longer than you should have?

A great weekend for families

BY SHNIEKA L. JOHNSON

Trying to figure out what to do over the long weekend of Martin Luther King, Jr. Day? Looking to go somewhere that is just a short plane, train, or car ride from New York? Consider Washington, D.C., where you can learn more about the civil rights leader. Although America's capital city is known for its politics, its history, diversity, and accessibility draws families from throughout the country all year long.

Some of the biggest draws in D.C. are the impressive monuments, museums, mansions, and government buildings — many of which are free of charge. As expected, there is heightened security in D.C., but there are concerted efforts to keep the significant buildings open to the general public. With proper planning, you can schedule a visit or even a tour. The opportunity to witness the government in action is equally thrilling. Imagine walking through the Pentagon, taking a peek into the Supreme Court, or standing in awe of the lavish rooms in the White House. If you are planning to visit the White House, remember that trips must be coordinated through your member of Congress at least 21 days before the planned trip.

The Arlington National Cemetery — and its “sea of stones” that holds thousands of graves of those who served in the U.S. military — will humble you. The gravesites of President John F. Kennedy and his well-known brothers (former Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and former Sen. Ted Kennedy) are also housed at Arlington.

The Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Memorial is grand in scale, and is even more impressive in the evening with its spotlight beaming. By visiting the Memorial (or any of the memorials on the National Mall and Tidal Basin) at night, you will encounter smaller crowds. If visiting on Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Day (Jan. 19), you can witness the parade and peace walk. As part of the celebration for Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Day, you can also attend the Kennedy Center celebration “Let Freedom Ring,” or participate in a day of service to honor the slain civil rights leader.

Throughout D.C., there are statues, plaques, and monuments to honor those who helped shape our country. The most visited sites are on the National Mall, and the National Park Service has conveniently developed an app to navigate the area easily (entitled “NPS National Mall”). Another feature of the app is the “park lens” that aids users in locating nearby monuments. You can follow a recommended tour or create your own. If you plan ahead, you can also print a copy of the useful “Be a Park Ranger” packet for your kids. This will add a sense of adventure to your visit to the National Mall and its monuments.

Washington D.C. is a terrific place for families, and you will be drawn in by the educational and historical appeal the city offers. There are also tantalizing restaurants that you will want to seek out. During the week of Jan. 19 to 25, you can take advantage of Restaurant Week, when more than 200 restaurants will be offering three-course lunches for $20.15 and three-course dinners for $35.15. This will be a great opportunity to experience D.C.'s best restaurants at affordable prices.

Here are 10 places and events that you cannot miss:

The value of Catholic schools

Why parents choose this effective alternative

BY CANDI SPARKS

At a time when the New York City public school system is under so much criticism and revision, working families have found an alternative in the Catholic school system. These schools have historically been the ones to reach out to and support communities in need.

Years ago, hundreds of thousands of immigrants came to the New World to have a fresh start. They put in long hours at low-level jobs, striving for greater opportunity and a better life for their children. It was a financial sacrifice for these immigrants to send their children to Catholic schools, rather than through the public school system, but to them, it was well worth it.

The public schools in their working-class neighborhoods were largely overcrowded and not necessarily providing top-notch education. In order to be more assured that their children would be taught their values — including discipline, which was a rigorous part of their children's life at home — they decided to send their children through a parochial school system, even if it meant struggling to find the extra money to pay for it.

In the early days of the immigration wave, it was primarily Irish and Italian immigrants that sent their children to Catholic parochial schools. As the years went by and new immigrants came from more countries and continents, the demographic shifted and one didn't necessarily have to be Catholic to choose this educational option. As a result, many Catholic schools throughout the city have continued as an integral part of our citywide school landscape.

Currently, Catholic schools serve more than 160 nationalities. With each wave of immigration — Hispanic, Asian, Slavic and many others — Catholic schools offer diversity. These schools are not just racially diverse; there is also religious diversity in the Catholic school system. In fact, non-Catholics comprise about one quarter of the student body.

“Catholic schools are not just meant for the faithful. We are here to grow faith by building community and reaching out to those in need,” says Tom O'Brien, of the Brooklyn Diocese, which is involved in raising scholarship funds to help families offset tuition. “But not every Catholic school family is in great economic need. Our demographic is changing. We have seen an influx of middle income families who choose Catholic school because of the class size, excellence in education, and for a safer environment than what most parents think the neighborhood public school would offer.”

Patty, a public school teacher from the Bronx, sends her son Ronald to a Catholic elementary school.

“The environment stresses academics and doing the right thing,” she says. “The teachers set high standards for the children. They are expected to do well and they rise to the occasion.”

Many Catholic school students are the first ones in their families to graduate from college. In low-income neighborhoods, this means that the school is providing the lion's share of educational support for children who do not have access to private tutoring or help at home.

There is a 99 percent graduation rate for Catholic high schools, followed by a 97 percent college graduation rate for those who graduated Catholic high school. Compared to the 41 percent public high school graduation rate, Catholic school students have a better success rate. They are guided up the ladder of growth and achievement, making a real difference for present and future generations. Overall, Catholic school seems to outperform public school and is a viable, less-expensive system of education in the private sector.

In fact, the only two private schools in New York State that were designated by the U.S. Department of Education as Blue Ribbon — a program that honors public and private elementary, middle, and high schools whose students achieve at very high levels, or schools that make significant progress in closing the achievement gap — in 2011 were both Catholic schools in the Archdiocese of New York. The honorees were St. Ignatius Loyola School on E. 84th Street in Manhattan and St. Ignatius on Mott Street in Manhattan. This year's honorees show the excellence in education and the diverse population served by Catholic schools. The incentives for getting a Catholic school education are different than what they used to be, and this is changing the demographics of Catholic school students.

“Families that don't have money don't usually have many choices. We needed to find a school with the right mix for Benny. He really wanted to play baseball. The only school that we could find to bridge the gap was a Catholic school. We are all very happy with the switch,” says Elizabeth, a Brooklyn mother of two, who chose to send her son to a Catholic school with solid academics and a baseball program.

Likewise, Patty, of East Harlem, sends her daughter Amber to a bilingual Catholic school.

“My daughter goes to a school that gives her [education] in both languages,” says Patty. “Sure, they speak the same languages in the public school around the corner, but it is unofficial. The public school does not have the same structure.” Amber’s Catholic school is also closely related to other parish activities and offers bilingual masses, events and service projects for the community. This makes the Catholic school a great way for Patty and Amber to meet people of similar backgrounds and build a community. Parochial schools celebrate the tradition of faith, family and community.

Unfortunately, keeping these schools open has become a challenge. The Catholic school sector is no different than any other, and closings have been publicized. In response, Catholic schools are researching and developing new educational business models. Some Catholic schools have closed their doors, only to reopen as academies. For example, in South Ozone Park, the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary School and St. Stanislaus Bishop and Martyr School closed their doors, only to be succeeded by the Divine Mercy Catholic Academy. Because the school involves more than one parish, the school is called an academy to differentiate it from a single-parish school. Since 2005, the Brooklyn Diocese has opened many Catholic academies in Brooklyn and Queens.

The Brooklyn Diocese has also implemented the program “Preserving the Vision.” The name means exactly what it says: preserving what has always been an integral part of Catholic life: the education of children. This vision includes developing schools that will be better able to meet the diverse and changing needs of students and parents, and providing competitive compensation and benefits to teachers and staff.

Even though two schools in the Archdiocese of New York have won the 2011 Blue Ribbon Award, the organization is still committed to improving. The Archdiocese has initiated the “Pathways to Excellence” program, aimed at professional development for principals, teachers and staff at schools that already do outstanding work. Because of the diverse population, there is still more than can be done to close the achievement gap. The program is aimed at raising standardized test scores and providing teachers with new classroom tools, such as the digital teaching program for fourth and fifth grade math, “Time to Know,” which provides online learning, data collection and feedback for the school.

Personally, I am proud to share that my fondest childhood memories revolve around a humble beginning, in a humble neighborhood. My siblings and I attended a Catholic elementary school, Our Lady of Victory, for eight years. I am pleased that Catholic schools are committed to remaining vibrant institutions for generations to come.

Windows & wheels

Learning to let go when your child grows up

CHERISH THE MOMENTS

BY PATRICK HEMPFING

Why did I have to see that when I peered out from my in-laws' patio on Christmas morning? It could have been anything else — a rambunctious squirrel, a trespassing dog, or low-flying vultures. Instead, I saw a teenage girl run across my in-laws' backyard to the rear window of the neighboring house. She paused at the window and looked toward the street. She blew two kisses to, I'm guessing, the friend who dropped her off. Then she carefully lifted the window from the outside, crawled into her house, and closed the window and blinds behind her.

As a parent, I had trouble processing what I had just witnessed. If my daughter was sneaking out of the house for who-knows-what-kind of get together, I'd want to know about it. I'd certainly rather deal with it now than nine months later when there could be additional issues. However, I didn't know the people, and wouldn't want to cause trouble between my in-laws and their new neighbors. I decided to mind my own business; yet, I couldn't get it out of my head.

About an hour later, I was helping my 8-year-old daughter, Jessie, with her new purple dress. As I buttoned it up in the back and tied the bow around her waist, I flashed back to the teenage girl I had seen earlier that morning. It feels like I was just changing Jessie's diaper. Now she's wearing size 10 dresses and stands as tall as her mother's chin.

I felt it was time for a talk. No, not "the talk" as her mother, Mattie, will cover that one. This one I could handle. I told Jessie that she must never sneak out of the house. Her response didn't put me completely at ease, though I accepted it. She said, "I'll check with Momma." Maybe she knows that Dad will say "no" more quickly when it comes to dating decisions.

Later on Christmas Day, Jessie opened a special gift — a pair of roller skates. The next day we went to the park to break them in. Mattie was on one side holding her hand while

I was a steady force on the other side. Even though Jessie had on her helmet and elbow and knee pads, it was still stressful for me. We went back to the park to practice again the following two days. Jessie improved dramatically each day. On the third day, Mattie just watched while I held my daughter's hand. Then Jessie said it. "Daddy, you need to let go."

Reluctantly, I released her hand but remained within catching distance behind her. Mattie's brother, who was with us, laughed at me as I zoomed in ready for the catch each time Jessie flailed her arms. His laughter didn't bother me, though, because I was right where I needed to be.

Later, I again thought about the teenage girl in the window, knowing that Jessie's teenage years aren't that far away. I realize that more "letting go" times are ahead. I also know it's not possible to catch all the falls. I'm hoping that because I've stood beside Jessie when she learns to skate, and for many of the other important times of her childhood, that I'll never have to stand guard outside her bedroom window.

I've concluded that parenting requires seeing your child through a series of wheels — stroller, wagon, tricycle, training, bicycle, scooter, and now roller skate wheels. I'm going to enjoy the pink skate wheels stage to the fullest. Something tells me that seeing Jessie behind the wheel of a car will be much harder. When that time comes, I'll be beside her in the front seat. Then it will be time for Daddy to let go again, and Mattie and I will find ourselves peering out the window, waiting for her safe return home.

Talking with Sasha Lipton, founder of Second Chance Toys

BY TAMMY SCILEPPI

Her desire to help kids in need went hand-in-hand with her green attitude, and gradually evolved into a vision. And it all started with a couple of discarded, rescued, and recycled plastic toys that she donated for the holidays.

Sasha Lipton grew up in a New Jersey town, about a half-hour outside of Manhattan. In 2006, at age 15, she looked around her and saw a lot of sadness — families living in nearby communities who were struggling to put food on the table and couldn't afford to buy toys for their kids. She felt compassion for them and decided to take action.

Fast forward eight years. Thanks to Second Chance Toys, the organization that Lipton founded as a teen, nearly 200,000 gently used, donated toys have been distributed to local organizations serving kids in need, like Head Starts and family shelters. In so doing, Second Chance Toys has helped keep 40 tons of non-biodegradable plastic out of our landfills.

Lipton calls her movement “recycled love and a second chance.”

Due to its partnership with Kohl's early on, Second Chance Toys got much-needed funding to create a website and hire a full-time employee.

And on Thanksgiving Day 2014, in the spirit of gratitude, Lipton, now 24, appeared on “Good Morning America” to talk about her life's work and Second Chance Toys abcnews.go.com/GMA/video/chance-toys-recycles-unwanted-toys-27218383.

Standing beside a ginormous box overflowing with an array of rescued toys, Lipton, who currently lives on the Upper West Side, described the impact her organization has made on so many kids' lives, and reminded viewers to donate toys for the holidays.

The Second Chance Toys story

NY Parenting spoke with Lipton about Second Chance Toys and what's next.

Tammy Scileppi: What were the circumstances that led to Second Chance Toys?

Sasha Lipton at a Second Chance Toys event.

Sasha Lipton: I came up with the idea for Second Chance Toys in high school, while driving around on a big garbage collection day. I noticed that so many people were throwing away plastic toys and I knew that there were so many kids in towns not far from mine (in New Jersey) whose parents couldn't afford those toys. Additionally, I knew the toys were headed straight for the landfill — and that throwing out these plastic toys presented a hazard to our environment.

When I began collecting plastic toys, I enlisted my mom (and her sports utility vehicle, since I couldn't drive yet) and we started retrieving these toys from the curb, one by one, until our basement was filled. We then cleaned and tagged them with notes for the new owners, and delivered them to a family violence shelter in Newark.

TS: How can people get involved?

SL: The small idea I had really took off and has become contagious because anyone can join in and help! Whether you want to donate, collect, or receive toys, just visit our website, www.secondchancetoys.org, for information.

And we couldn't have expanded without the help of corporate partners like 1-800-Got-Junk, Kohl's, and Old Spice.

TS: Describe your “Good Morning America” experience.

SL: It was so exciting for me to be able to share the Second Chance Toys story with millions of viewers watching “Good Morning America.” I especially loved the big toy box they created and I thought it was awesome that they held a toy drive of their own, with all of the producers, so that we would have toys for the segment and so that they could make a donation to children in need.

TS: So, what's next?

SL: We want to continue expanding across the US and make Second Chance Toys a household name. I hope that someday people everywhere will know that they can donate their toys to other children and that there is no need to throw them away. In order to do this we are looking to connect with a national retail partner that would hold collections during the holidays or Earth week. We are also always looking for new corporations to partner with that will help us grow.

TS: What do you do in your spare time?

SL: I love to workout (mostly barre and spin classes), cook or bake, try new restaurants, and get outdoors as often as possible!

While Lipton sits on the board of Second Chance Toys, she also has a "day job," working as a digital producer at Everyday Health for the past year and a half. Each summer, her company hosts an event in which employees divide up amongst various organizations and spend their day volunteering.

Recycled love and pro-social millennials

Millennials like Lipton are eager to make a difference. She is a shining example of how pro-social behavior benefits others by changing people's lives for the better and helping make the world a nicer place in which to live. With Second Chance Toys, she says she has the ability to put smiles on children's faces — and that's a powerful thing.

The Millennial Generation (about ages 18 to 33) is made up of extremely ambitious young people who believe in good causes and have high expectations for themselves, as well as for those around them.

In fact, one in-depth, worldwide study by Deloitte revealed that many millennials, like Lipton, tend to be very charitable: 63 percent donate to charities, 43 percent actively volunteer or are a member of a community organization, and 52 percent have signed petitions. And a new study on millennials in the workforce shows that 88 percent — especially young women — gravitate toward companies with strong corporate social responsibility programs. More and more companies have been focusing on addressing a variety of social and environmental issues.

Solange Charas, a gender-in-the-workplace expert, weighs in why young women like Lipton are leaders in the business of helping others.

"Women want their work to have meaning and purpose — for them to have a feeling of usefulness and worth, to feel like they make a difference, that they have some control over their jobs and lives and that they are socially included," she explains. "There is a draw for women to work at organizations with a strong culture of giving back because of what those organizations stand for — namely, providing a context for purpose and meaning of their work. I think this is particularly important for women, as they have a natural (and learned) propensity to take care of others, and organizations that align their mission and vision with taking care of others, naturally resonates with women."

"Organizations that have strong corporate social responsibility cultures are good at connecting the dots of what employees do in their work, and how it impacts the world — or provides a social good, like Toms, [a company that matches every pair of shoes purchased with a pair of new shoes for a child in need]," she adds.

Reputational Institute has identified the top-10 corporate-social-responsibility-organizations as:

- Google

- Disney
- BMW
- Apple
- Daimler (Mercedes Benz)
- VW
- Sony
- Colgate-Palmolive
- LEGO Group

Making a difference

It's the dawn of a new year, so in the spirit of giving back and de-cluttering, why not ask your kids to donate their gently used toys, as they make room for all those cool, new gifts they got over the holidays?

The process can also serve as a teaching moment: You have to give to get.

Second Chance Toys holds two toy drives annually: One in December and another for Earth Day, in April.

Visit www.secondchancetoys.org and click "donate" for drop-off locations in New York City and other areas. There will be plenty in the spring and you and your family can celebrate Earth Day by recycling plastic toys and giving them a second chance.

Don't see a drop off location near you? Consider starting a collection. It takes just 50 toys to be matched with an organization.

Mediators versus divorce attorneys

I'm talking with someone at a networking event, and he asks about the work I do. "I'm a mediator," I say. "I help people — often people who are getting divorced — resolve their conflicts without going to court." He responds, "I wish I had known about you when I was going through my divorce. It was horrible."

How many times has someone said this to me? Many times.

I'll often ask, "Did you have a lawyer for your divorce?" Almost everyone answers "yes."

"Did your lawyer tell you about mediation?" Almost always, the answer is "no."

Some mediation clients tell a similar story. They started with a divorce lawyer, didn't like where it was going, and then learned about mediation, but not from the lawyer. The attorney didn't say anything about the process.

Mediator colleagues have told me of similar experiences. The stories are anecdotal, but I believe that they are indicative of a widespread problem; namely, that when potential clients consult with lawyers, the lawyers fail to provide them with information that they might find important and helpful.

I want to acknowledge the lawyers who do share such information, and I think that there are more than a few matrimonial attorneys who tell a potential client about mediation, even at the risk of "losing" (not being retained) by that person.

Should all divorce lawyers tell those coming to them about something mediation, when doing so might cost them business?

David Saxe apparently thinks so. Saxe, an associate justice at the Appellate Division, wrote an article for the New York Law Journal (read primarily by lawyers) in 2011, entitled "Encourage Divorce Clients to Mediate". In it, he pointed out that the litigation process often extended into years, exacerbating conflicts instead of resolving them amicably, and that legal fees can often be enormous, sometimes well into the six figures, for the more contentious cases.

Saxe wrote that mediation was "more focused on the needs of the parties [than litigation]," and that in mediation "the majority of the expended time is devoted to exploring disputes, proposals, suggestions and possible solutions."

Are many more matrimonial attorneys informing (let alone 'encouraging') those who come into their offices about mediation since the Saxe article was published? Who are giving a brief overview of how it works and saying that the process might save time and money? That spouses who mediate reach their own agreements on how to spend time with their children, how to divide property, and on all their other questions? I doubt it.

Informed decision-making is at the very heart of mediation. That is, parties in mediation are required to gather and share information so that they can make the important decisions that they need to.

Imagine a wife saying in regard to her husband, "I don't need to know anything. What's his is his and I don't care." Imagine that same wife learning that her husband is holding a winning lottery ticket worth $5 million, and that she may be entitled to a share of the proceeds. Might this hypothetical wife make a different decision, knowing about the lottery ticket and its value, than she would if she were ignorant of it?

While the example seems far-fetched, I think that the point is clear. Having information may impact our choices.

According to the New York Rules of Professional Conduct <https://www.nycourts.gov/rules/jointappellate/NY-Rules-Prof-Conduct-1200.pdf>, communication is rule number one: A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation.

I don't believe, as some do, that everyone should have to try mediation, but everyone getting divorced should at least know that it is an option. Then that person can decide what to do. In my view keeping such information from a potential client is downright unethical.

ness. Annie really teaches Mr. Stacks how to live and be happy.

Annie is an amazing movie for the entire family. I recommend this movie for boys and girls ages 5 to 18 and give it five out of five stars. It is in theaters now, so go check it out!

The movie “Annie” is fantastic. It is one of my favorite movies of all time. This modern-day remake of the old classic is about Annie (Quvenzhané Wallis), a young foster girl who is trying to find her parents. One day she is chasing after a group of kids who are trying to harm a dog. She trips and falls in the middle of the street. Williams Stacks (Jamie Foxx), who is running for mayor, grabs her before a truck hits her. The rescue goes viral and Mr. Stacks begins to show favorable ratings in the polls. As a result, Mr. Stacks’ campaign manager thinks Mr. Stacks should spend more time with Annie to continue to increase his poll ratings. Mr. Stacks’ team believes this would surely be his ticket to becoming mayor. During their time together, both Mr. Stacks and Annie learn a lot about each other and themselves.

The message of this film is you can be and do anything you can dream of. During the movie, Mr. Stacks encourages Annie to work hard, because “the world is yours, if you dare to work at it.” Annie finds herself in a tough situation and she remembers what Mr. Stacks shared with her about working hard.

My favorite character is Annie because she is very outgoing, not afraid to face challenges, and she is a very optimistic young girl. Quvenzhané also sings very well.

The actors are perfect. They sing, dance, and do a marvelous job bringing a modern-day twist to this old classic.

This film is perfect for the entire family. I recommend it for boys and girls ages 5 to adults and give it five out of five stars. Annie is a must see this holiday season. It is playing in theaters now, so don’t miss it.

Kid movie critics review ‘Annie’

KIDS FIRST! FILM CRITIC

Now open, “Annie” offers an updated version of the classic tale about a foster kid, who lives with her mean foster mom, and sees her life change when business tycoon and New York mayoral candidate Will Stacks makes a thinly-veiled campaign move and takes her in. With a stellar cast and fabulous music, this is a lovely film to share with your children and grandchildren this holiday season.

The movie “Annie” is a phenomenal one! This is a modern-day version of the original classic about a young foster girl who is very hopeful that her parents are coming back for her one day. Annie (played by Quvenzhané Wallis) almost gets run over by a van as she is running through the streets of New York, trying to stop a group of boys from harming a dog. Then Mr. Will Stacks (Jamie Foxx) saves her life. Someone records the rescue, and it is immediately posted all over the news and social media. Mr. Stacks is a businessman running for mayor of New York, and sees this positive publicity as a way to increase his chances of becoming mayor. He and his team decide to bring Annie over for lunch to take pictures of the two of them together. It turns out Annie ends up staying a little longer than they originally anticipate.

Annie is my favorite character because she is a young girl with great character and an infectious personality. She believes a “No, is just a yes that people don’t know yet.” She has a big heart. When she is given the opportunity of a lifetime, she shares her experiences with her friends.

I really enjoyed watching Annie and her friends clean and sing, “It’s a Hard-Knock Life.” Even though they are cleaning a very dirty foster home where the caregiver is not very nice to them, they continue to joyfully sing and dance while they clean. This is a perfect example of making the best of a not-so-good situation.

Everyone needs somebody. Will Stacks thinks money, wealth, and his successful business is all he needs. He realizes that there is more to life than money and a successful busi-

Parenting conference

The 92Y presents the third annual 92Y Parenting Conference on Jan. 25 — with a focus on dads.

Both working and stay-at-home parents will benefit from hearing the latest from today's top experts on how to be great role models, and raise happy, healthy kids, at the forum, "Why Fathers Matter: Creating Successful Parenting Partnerships."

Topics include: At-home Dads: What Do Breadwinning Moms Really Think?; Juggling Dads: Finding Time for Work, Family & Play; and Parenting Partnerships: Building a High-Performance Parenting Team.

"The Science of Fatherhood" delivers the lowdown on how research is changing the conversation, and how fathers shape their children's bodies, brains and futures.

Speakers include psychologist and author Dr. Michael Thompson; author Paul Raeburn ("Do Fathers Matter"); and Lance Somerfeld, founder of NYC Dads.

Parent workshop, Jan. 25 from 10 am to 3 pm; tickets are $99.

Fight colds and flu with these foods

It's back! Cold and flu season, that is. Besides the usual prevention tips — washing your hands often, getting eight-to-10 hours of sleep each night, and drinking plenty of fluids — there are specific foods that can prevent and even help shorten the length of this year's colds and flu.

One of the most important things you can do is to consume foods rich in probiotics. Why? These friendly bacteria promote a stronger immune system by populating the gastrointestinal tract (or gut), the largest organ of immunity in the body.

Yogurt made with live and active cultures, fermented vegetables like kimchi and sauerkraut, fermented soybeans products like miso and tempeh are all rich in probiotics.

It's also important to consume foods rich in prebiotics. These are the foods that fuel our body's friendly bacteria. A plant-based, high-fiber diet that includes artichokes, asparagus, bananas, raisins, onions, garlic, leeks, and oats contains prebiotics and is another way to positively impact your gut microflora.

Looking for menu items? These common foods may be in your kitchen right now.

Vegetarian chili

Most chili dishes contain onions, garlic, beans and a variety of spices. Both onions and garlic contain antiviral properties, which can help combat viruses. Kidney beans are packed with vitamin B, which strengthens the immune system and can ultimately help build your defense system against germs. Lastly, spices not only add a hint of flavor to meals, but can clear your sinuses of congestion as well.

Fresh Clementines

Clementines are packed with vitamin C, which we all know is an antioxidant powerhouse. Although loads of vitamin C cannot ensure total cold and flu prevention, it can decrease the duration of both. Two clemen-tines account for 100 percent of your vitamin C intake for the entire day.

Roast beef sandwich

Both roast beef and whole grain bread are loaded with zinc. This mineral has been known to stop the growth of microorganisms, including harmful bacteria. A half of sandwich with a cup of chicken soup can make for a comforting meal if you are feeling under the weather. Don't forget, chicken soup has been known to help control inflammation and congestion.

Tuna fish

Tuna contains an amino acid, glutamio, which aids in immune health. Spice up this basic lunchmeat with one tablespoon of low-fat mayonnaise and spread on whole grain crackers.

Ginger

Ginger helps relieve congestion and can calm the throat if you have a cough or slight irritation. Make a cup of homemade ginger tea with a bit of honey and a side of ginger snap cookies for a comforting treat.

Don't let the cold or flu get you or your children down this fall. Boost your immune system by consuming both pro- and pre-biotics. These foods provide a greater volume and diversity of microorganisms in the gut which offers a better defense against disease causing invaders.
