Living in a 'blue' state

November has been a very upsetting month. The election outcome has made so many people feel down and confused, particularly here in our city which overwhelmingly supported Hillary Clinton. There has been an air of disbelief and shock has settled in. Teachers and parents throughout the city have had to deal with children reacting to the rancor and partisanship of this election cycle, and bitter words and sexual innuendo became a part of the discourse. All ugly stuff and certainly not the kind of example of grown-up behavior we want our children to emulate.

Blue state/red state, I'm getting sick and tired of the mass media dividing us up the way they do. Our votes seem disenfranchised when we are categorized this way. The electoral college is impossible to explain to adults, let alone to children, and why should people in three or four states be the deciding factor as to who wins such important elections? Isn't it time for our nation to do away with this nonsense and to have a direct vote like other countries? Isn't it also time for us to be voting on Sundays instead of on a work day that almost no one has off? Isn't it also time for all this polling to stop — which I am absolutely certain sways the vote and actually does result in rigged elections.

Millions of new young voters participated in this election and most of them walked away disappointed and disenfranchised and seeing the process as disingenuous. We can only hope they won't be opting out moving forward, thinking that they can't make a difference. We already have enough of our citizens opting out of voting. We need to do everything we can to encourage their participation on every level. Bernie Sanders, thank goodness, is still out there inspiring and communicating to this very important demographic. Our future depends on them.

Finally, I am blue because my daughter has had to deal with a few surgeries resulting from a recent fall. The fall was bad enough to shatter her ankle, and she will be spending a number of months healing and doing rehab. It certainly has put a crimp in her style and also in mine. Our children are still our children, even when they get taller than us and even when they move out and are on their own. We are parents forever.

I'm very grateful to all the people who help put together these magazines and who manage our website and all our other digital initiatives. I wish them and you, our readers, and all our many advertisers, a very Happy Holiday Season. Thanks for reading and Have a Happy New Year!

Ho, ho, Hanukkah

Tips on celebrating both Hanukkah and Christmas

BY CHRISTINA KATZ

You don't have to be an interfaith family to celebrate both Hanukkah and Christmas each year. Any family can choose to celebrate whichever holiday traditions they wish. Holiday joy can be doubled, rather than halved, when you choose to light the menorah and decorate the Christmas tree to honor the cultural and religious traditions of both parents.

So forget the "December Dilemma." When it comes to religion, families increasingly run the Judeo-Christian gamut. In our family, we have Orthodox Jews on one side of the family tree and born-again Christians on the other side. But my husband and I both share the same beliefs about diversity, tolerance, and spirituality. And that's what we intend to pass on to our daughter.

As a woman who was raised Catholic and has been happily married to a Jewish man for the past 13 years, I can attest that once you become a parent in an interfaith family, you quickly become accustomed to not being able to please everyone. But since the wisdom of your hearts brought you and your partner together in the first place, why not call on that same source of wisdom to guide you through creating your own version of happy holidays?

Here are a few tips based on what our family has learned from holding the middle ground over the years:

Talk to each other first and last

The bottom line on family celebrations, holiday or otherwise, is to always do whatever you and your spouse deem best for your family. The only way to come to an understanding about what this means is to discuss it with each other first and last.

Be prepared for this to be an ongoing conversation, and probably one that you revisit each year.

Protect your joint point of view

Never let bossy or opinionated family members horn in on conversations that rightly belong between you and your partner. You only have one spouse, and that's the person whose opinion you should value most. Your kids come next, and the grandparents after them.

Don't treat your parents like children or allow them to treat you like a child. This behavior will only create conflicts between you and your spouse.

Ignore disapproving outsiders

Never apologize for being an interfaith family, even if people in your extended family or circle of close friends do not approve of your union. You are not seeking their permission — as Perchick expressed so boldly in "Fiddler On The Roof" — you are asking for their blessing.

Creating harmonious and joyful dual holidays in your own home is your parental right and your familial duty, even if it means agreeing to disagree with certain members of your extended family.

Stick to separate but equal

Christmas may be more common and commercial than Hanukkah, but don't let that trump your holiday fun. The nice thing about Hanukkah is that it lasts for eight nights. Light the menorah candles and say the Hanukkah prayer every night, if you possibly can. You may be amazed at how moving and inspiring such simple rituals can be, even on busy school nights.

Look for the quieter, more awe-inspiring moments in Christmas as well, such as ending the day admiring the beauty of the decorated tree and window lights.

Keep both sets of traditions

At our house, we celebrate as much of both traditions as we can, without a worry about whether the holidays overlap or not. For me, this means the Christmas tree, the presents, the cookies, the big dinner. For my husband this means lighting two menorahs for eight nights (one for him and one for my daughter), having our daughter's friends over for potato latkes, and some lively dreidel games.

Don't double your gift budget

We make an effort to celebrate the bounty of two holidays without going overboard. If you are an interfaith family, your kids' friends may consider them "lucky" because they assume that they get double the gifts every holiday season. However, that's not necessarily the case at our house.

Our daughter typically gets a little present on the first day of Hanukkah and a bigger present on the last day of Hanukkah. One set of grandparents send a couple of little Hanukkah gifts and a check and the other sends a couple of stocking stuffers and a check. The amount of gifts she receives is essentially the same as it would be if we only celebrated one holiday.

Share the love

Another thing we enjoy about dual holidays is that our daughter can share traditions about both holidays with her friends, no matter what religion they follow, exposing them to a culture they may not have had the opportunity to learn about.

Participate wisely

When invited to join a new or old tradition on either side of the family, give the ritual a chance. We will try just about anything once. But we reserve the right to say “no” to pressure or anything that makes us uncomfortable.

Maintaining an atmosphere where you can say “yes” or “no” to your parents without stern chastisement may not come easily in your extended family system. But start trying it, or you’ll never get there.

Honor the choices of others

We don’t try to protect our family members from our choices. They need to be exposed to what we value, if we expect them to understand and accept our choices. However, we also try to respect the choices that each of our family members make without imposing our life choices on them. The Jewish families get Happy Hanukkah cards and the Christian families get Christmas cards. When we cross over, we go with “Happy Holidays.”

Author, journalist, and writing coach Christina Katz loves celebrating the winter holidays with her family and friends. Each year her family enjoys exchanging ornaments for the tree and inviting a new group of friends over to play the dreidel game and enjoy potato latkes.

Rock your resolutions

How to improve your life in 2017

BY GOLDA SMITH

The new year is almost here. What excites you most about it? Maybe it's the idea of wiping the slate clean and starting over. Or perhaps it is the ritual of making those resolutions to achieve more and do better.

According to the Journal of Clinical Psychology, 45 percent of Americans make resolutions; however, many of those people had abandoned their resolutions after three months. While I am sure most people have great intentions, and want to achieve their resolutions, the stumbling block for most is that they have brought the habits, attitudes, and behaviors that haven't worked in the past year into the present.

If you want something new, you must do something new ... and yes, it can be scary and it is work.

If you are ready to confidently make 2017 YOUR year, then keep reading. What separates the people that achieve their goals from the those that don't? These four habits, attitudes, and behaviors certainly are not an exhaustive list, but it is a great start. The first habit to leave in 2016 is:

The habit of procrastination

We have all had our moment or two with procrastination. Putting off balancing the check book, cleaning the closet, or getting up an hour early like we promised to go work out. I laugh as I write this paragraph, because it applies to me as well, so let's all have a good laugh.

There are several types of procrastinators, from the drama addict or the angry giver to the neurotic perfectionist, but the bottom line is that prolonged avoidance is an invitation to pain.

To leave procrastination behind, you have to identify the underlying cause of the procrastination. Is it to control a situation, to rebel, to avoid pain, or some other reason? When you can name it, then you can address it and finally put it behind you, or at least learn how to navigate it.

Stop the comparison game

Social media is my adult playground. I have made some great relationships through Twitter, Facebook, and Instagram. At the same time, it was also a source of great discomfort for me and maybe for you, too. Like most of you, I would spend way too much time mindlessly scrolling through Instagram photos and thus, I found myself comparing my body — which did the miraculous job of growing two humans — to the half-naked Photoshopped bodies of 20-something-year-old women. The comparison game is self-inflicted cruelty.

My suggestion? Scroll through your Instagram account and check your feed. If the images in the accounts you follow leave you feeling empty or wishing you had that body, un-follow that account now. Life is too short to not feel like you are enough just the way you are, which brings me to the third habit you can leave in 2016:

The daily weigh-in

I know people that weigh themselves several times a day. Did you know that the average person has a five-pound weight fluctuation in an average day? Functions like breathing, sweating, eating, and drinking all influence the number on the scale. I understand that you want to see progress (especially if your goal is to release weight) however, constantly weighing yourself and wishing for the scale to magically show your magic number is not going to make it happen any faster. Instead, focus on the inches you are loosing and how you feel in your clothes.

Negative inner (and outer) dialogue

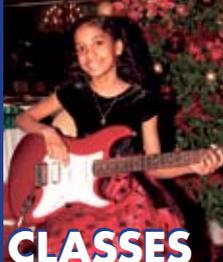

This is probably the biggest behavior you can leave in 2016 that will have the biggest impact on your life. What you think about yourself or someone else eventually comes out of your mouth! Think about that for a moment. Women are so quick to think and make negative comments about themselves. Let's make a pledge to make a conscious decision to stop talking negatively about ourselves and others — yes, even the nosey neighbor we can't stand. The next time you catch yourself thinking a negative thought, stop and speak a word of gratitude.

I sincerely wish each of you a very happy and prosperous New Year, and while it can be a little scary (let's be honest, it can be downright scary) to let go of the familiar — even if it is dysfunctional — and embrace something new, I know you can do it. Let 2017 be your year of "Yes!"

Gifts for teacher

Fifteen fabulous ideas, all for $10 and under

BY DENISE YEARIAN

Finding a gift your child's teacher will enjoy at a price you can afford can be a challenging task. But it doesn't have to be. Here's a list of 15 fabulous $10-and-under gift suggestions:

You're an angel. Get a list from the teacher of practical things she can use in the classroom, and then create an angel tree. Children who want to give a gift can choose an angel item that will benefit the teacher and the classroom.

Contribute to charity. Teachers like it when families donate to a charitable organization in the student or classroom's name. Suggest names of charitable organizations that focus on helping children, then let your child choose one to give to. Follow up with a note to the teacher letting her know about your giving efforts.

Practical potpourri. Teachers don't often realize what they need to have on hand until it's too late, so an assortment of practical sundries makes a great gift. Ideas include Chapstick, a lint roller, safety pins, Tide-to-Go, Static Guard, and a small tool kit. Or consider a collection of health and wellness items to keep the classroom flu-free this winter: tissues, hand sanitizer, disinfectant spray, and Clorox wipes.

Conference day coupons. Conference times make it difficult for teachers to grab a hot meal or squeeze in a healthy snack. But parents can help by giving post-dated special delivery coupons. Send in a paid-for pizza one night during conference time. Or create a homemade fresh fruit basket and deliver it to the school when teachers are there for 13 hours straight.

Medley of rewards. Create an assortment of rewards and incentives the teacher can use in the classroom such as stickers, character pencils, and mini erasers. Websites such as www.OrientalTrading.com have a large variety of products and may offer free shipping.

Time-honored efforts. Most teachers welcome volunteer efforts. Create a coupon offering your services to make copies, grade papers, or prepare classroom supplies after hours. Or offer to come in once a month to read to the class, help with science projects, or tutor students who need a little assistance.

Crazy about cocoa. Chocolate, either in candy or baked goods, is a top choice amongst teachers. If you make something yourself, include the recipe, so they can duplicate it when they are craving chocolate in the future.

Thumbs-up planter. Purchase a terracotta pot and have your child place random thumbprints on it using different colors of paint. Use a permanent marker to turn the thumbprints into different bugs and flowers. Fill the pot with a live plant and attach a note that says, "Thank you for helping children grow."

Best bet bookends. Every classroom needs bookends, but they can be costly. If you can't find a set on sale, pick up a couple of bricks from the home improvement store and cover them with a layer of soft foam and school-themed material.

You've got talent! If you have a special skill, talent, or interest, gift it to your teacher. Are you a hair stylist? Offer a haircut. Manicurist? Offer a manicure. If you like to bake, treat your teacher to a baker's choice club membership. Whip up a batch of cinnamon rolls and include a coupon for one baked good every month between now and school year's end. In the future, deliver the baked item on the same day each month so your teacher knows when to expect it.

Take note! Writing supplies are a useful luxury. Purchase a pack of pretty stationery, blank thank you notes, or paper with matching envelopes so the teacher can write letters to her parents. Or personalize the gift by having your child paint a watercolor picture. Scan it on the computer, crop the image, print it on vellum paper and then mount it onto colored cardstock and give it with matching envelopes.

Bestow books. Purchase your child's favorite book and donate it to the school library. On the inside cover, have your child create a sticker that says, "Donated in honor of (teacher's name) by (child's name)," along with the date.

Group project

Need some collective classroom gifts suggestions? Consider these:

- Invite several families to join you in taking out a children's magazine subscription for the classroom. Websites such as www.Amazon.com and www.MagazinesUSA.com offer deeply discounted rates to such publications as Highlights, Ranger Rick, Your Big Backyard and more.

- Pick up a small, flip-style photo album and fill it with crowd-pleasing recipes submitted by other families in the classroom. Title it, "Class of 2017 Cookbook" and package it together with a couple of kitchen accessories: spatula, mixing spoons, and measuring cups.

- Teachers love to help other students learn. Gather money from other families and purchase a gift certificate to a local cosmetology school for a manicure, pedicure, or haircut. Package it with a comb, brush, deep hair conditioning packet, and the school's brochure of services.

- Gift certificates are a popular present this time of year. Suggest students in the classroom all purchase $5 gift cards to the same educational, book, or dollar store, or local eatery. Collectively, it will make enough to buy something useful or give the teacher a night out on the town.

Reel fine. Make a movie-themed package and include a $5 gift card to Redbox movie rentals, a box of microwave popcorn, and Swedish Fish or Milk Duds candy. Stop by a local movie theater and purchase a clean popcorn bucket for a minimal cost to use for themed packaging.

Great games. Keep kids occupied indoors during inclement weather by purchasing classroom games. Find out what games and activities the teacher does and doesn't have, then watch for sales in store flyers, look online, or find them at a garage sale.

Kid crafted. Teachers agree the best gifts come from the heart, not the pocket. Cards with sincere sentiments or pictures drawn by students are the most cherished presents of all.

CAPE MAY

Historic winter wonderland

BY THOMAS C. DAUS

Year after year, as the holiday season approaches, I find time to spend a weekend in the beautiful beach town of Cape May, New Jersey. Cape May in November and December has the charm of a spectacular winter wonderland!

The number of activities of this seaside town in December may surprise you! Cape May caters to revelers of all ages with a variety of family-based events.

Children will simply love the opportunity to meet Santa Claus at the annual Christmas parade on Dec. 3. Congress Hall, a hotel which dates back to 1816, has an adorable train ride for kids that circles around the perimeter of the property.

And you can stop by vendor stalls adjacent to that attraction and purchase charming gifts such as handmade scarves, porcelain items, and a variety of jams. The Cape May Arts and Humanities Center offers trolley tours. When dusk sets in, dazzling holiday lights transform the town.

The 43rd annual Christmas Candlelight House Tour will be in full swing on Saturdays, Dec. 3, 10, and 17. For a nominal fee, guests can tour about a dozen historical, Victorian homes. The Cape May homeowners generously allow visitors into their cozy and warmly decorated residences. A resolution to consider: Start estate planning

I have an initial meeting scheduled with an estate-planning attorney. How can I best prepare for the meeting?

The end of the year (in anticipation of New Year's resolutions!) is a perfect time to meet with an estate-planning attorney and knock this "to do" right off your checklist. It is also very smart to prepare for your meeting in advance so that you can make the best use of your time. Preparing your estate-planning documents is a very personal exercise, so you need to be comfortable with the attorney you choose. Most importantly, your attorney should be able to answer your questions and explain the proposed plan to you so that you understand what your documents mean.

Here are a few issues you, and, if applicable, your partner or spouse, should discuss in anticipation of doing your estate planning. You do not necessarily need to have answers to all of these questions, but you certainly should be thinking about them.

Disposatory plan

The first question to ask is how you want your assets distributed when you die. By assets, I mean real property, bank accounts, and your tangible "stuff." Many couples leave everything to their spouse or partner, and then to their children, but this does not necessarily have to be your objective. Consider whether you have concerns about your spouse remarrying, or whether you want to leave assets to other family members who may require care.

Guardians and alternate guardians of the person your minor children

Who do you want to serve as guardian of your children if you and your spouse or partner pass away? Who do you want to appoint as successor guardian if the primary guardian is unable, unwilling, or unavailable to serve? Do you want the guardian's spouse or another individual to serve as co-guardian? Do you want a different guardian to be appointed for different children (for example, half-siblings)? Do you want the guardian to be required to post a bond? Where do you want your minor children to live? Do you want your children to live in their guardian's home, or would you like your guardian and his or her family to move into your home? In either case, will there be a need for capital to make improvements to accommodate the new family unit?

Trustee and successor trustee for minor's trust

Individuals under the age of 18 are not legally competent to own property. In your Will, you can set an age before which a person cannot have outright access to the property you leave to him or her. Minor's trustees are effectively guardians of the property left to minor children. The trustee oversees the money left to your children if they are still minors (usually when both spouses predecease).

The trustee does not need to be the same person as the guardian and there are certain objectives that you might appoint a different person (i.e., ensuring checks and balances on the money and distributions; ensuring that both sides of a family are in contact after the parents are deceased). The guardian is usually someone who you feel can impart the most important values to your children, while the trustee is someone who can handle money, be responsible for it, and have a long-term view of preserving principal while balanced against providing for the minor children.

ASK AN ATTORNEY

Age at which minor children receive money

If both spouses pass away, you need to specify at what age your children will receive distributions of remaining principal. While the trustee usually has the discretion to distribute both income and principal for the health, education, maintenance, and support for the minors (a fairly broad standard), you need to state at which age the minor children will receive the balance of whatever is left after a certain point. One possibility is to allow for half at age 25 (or 30) and the other half at 30 (or 35). You can break it into thirds (25, 30, and 35). You can also provide an incentive for higher education by allowing for half at age 25 and the other half at 30 if the child graduates from an (accredited) college or graduate school, otherwise at 30 and 35.

Executors

Spouses are often named as the executor for the other's Will. An exception can be in second marriages where there are children of the first marriage and you want to ensure that the assets pass to the children of the first marriage after the death of the second spouse. Some other things to consider in choosing an executor are:

- Do you want your executor to be compensated?
- Do you want to impose a limitation on the amount of compensation they should receive?

Keep in mind that being an executor (or trustee) can entail a lot of work — it is essentially managing the aspects of your personal life that you manage now, such as balancing bank accounts and maintaining oversight over assets and satisfying liabilities. Should your executor be required to post a bond? (i.e., insurance if the executor loses or absconds with money).

Wills and credit shelter trusts

Each spouse can establish a Credit Shelter Trust in his or her Will up to the maximum amount that can be exempt from Federal or state estate taxes, currently $5.45 million and $4.187 million, respectively. A credit shelter trust is a tax-savings device that also allows one spouse to ensure that his or her assets will pass to the children in case the surviving spouse remarries. As noted above, you need to name a trustee of the Trust. As with choosing any fiduciary, you should seek to choose someone who is responsible and a prudent investor, but who will also make distributions to provide for the spouse. You want to choose a friendly trustee that will cooperate so that if you do need access to principal for a reasonable purpose, the trustee will not deny you that distribution.

Advance directives

These are documents — such as Power of Attorney of Healthcare Proxy — that are effective during your lifetime. Spouses usually name each other to make decisions for them during their lifetime, with successor agents to act in the event that the spouse is unable. While you can name one or more co-agents on the Power of Attorney, only one person can act at a time under a healthcare proxy in New York. Successor agents are critical and should be identified, together with their appropriate contact information.

Living will

A living will is a directive authorizing your agent to withhold certain life-sustaining measures (such as artificial respiration, CPR, resuscitation) in the event that you are suffering from an incurable condition from which you will not recover. The absence of a living will does not mean that the agent cannot make those decisions, but it does give the healthcare agent both the comfort, assurance, and authority to make those decisions in the event of a dispute with another family member or the hospital or healthcare professionals.

Special bequests

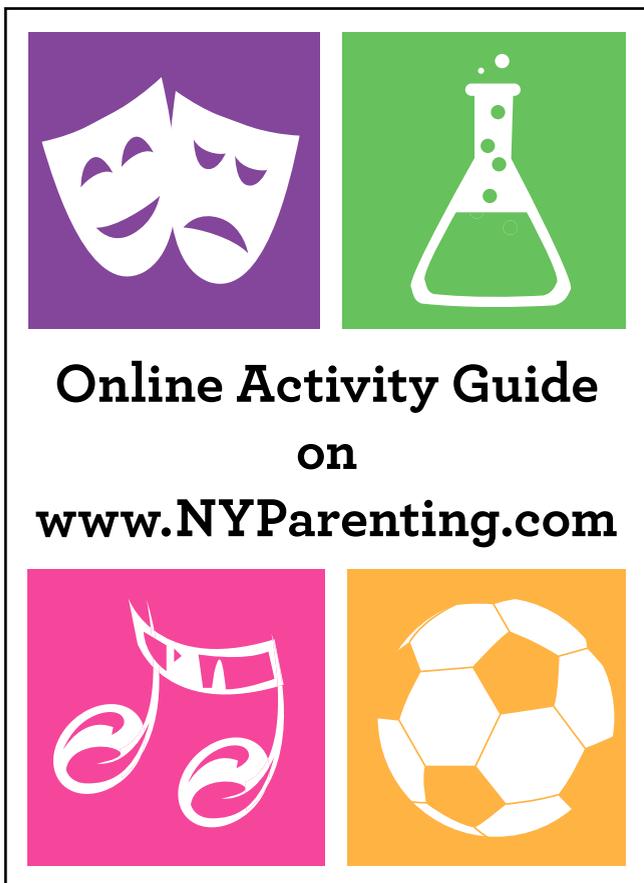

You should identify any specific items such as art, valuable books, collections, jewelry, or heirlooms that you want to be given to certain individuals. New York does not recognize personal property memoranda that are outside the Will; the executor has the discretion to honor the list but the list is not binding. Similarly, consider any monetary bequests that you want to make outright.

Taker of last resort and common disaster clause

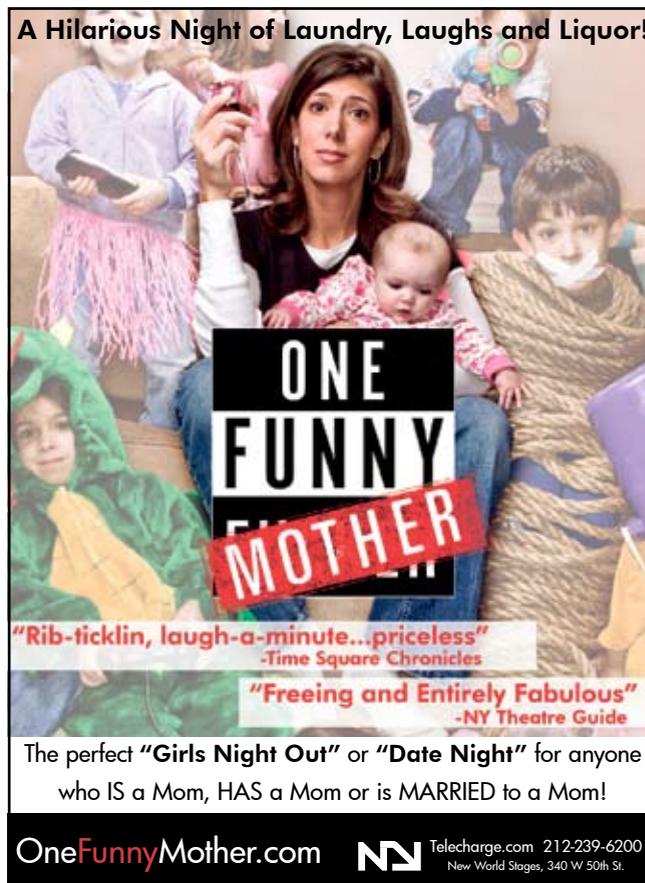

If both spouses and children pass away in a common disaster, where should the assets go? Typically, it goes to parents, siblings, nieces, and nephews. However, consider the situation of those people — leaving money to your parents could disrupt their own long-term planning needs and any Medicaid or other government benefits they might be receiving.

These are hard questions to face and answer, but they are necessary steps in the estate-planning process. Giving these questions thought before meeting with your attorney will help maximize the effectiveness of your conference.

Mediation and custody concerns

In my previous article, I introduced Bill and Angela, who had decided to get a divorce. Angela called and learned more about mediation, and shared the information with Bill. After further discussion, they decided (Bill, a little reluctantly) to schedule a consultation, at which they got a sense of who the mediator is, and had more of their questions answered. Here, I continue with their first working mediation session.

Note that while this first session deals with parenting matters, the session could focus on different issues. For instance, let's say that the mediator had learned during Angela's initial phone call or at the consultation (see previous article) that there is a pressing financial concern. For example, if one spouse said that he didn't have enough money to get through the next week or month, the first session would probably address that issue, rather than parenting.

The mediator asks about the parties, their children, and the Thanksgiving holiday.

With the spouses' permission, the mediator then turns the discussion to parenting issues.

Angela says that she wants full custody. Bill becomes defensive. They argue for a few minutes. The mediator listens and considers whether the verbal exchange is constructive, and then raises a question.

The mediator asks Bill and Angela, "What do you mean when you say 'custody?'"

The mediator listens to each person and checks that he understands what each has said. The mediator then suggests that maybe the question isn't "Which of you will have custody?" but rather, "What agreements can you reach so that you can be the kind of parents you want to be to your children?"

There is further discussion, some of it angry. The mediator helps the spouses to fully express their concerns, and asks clarifying questions.

The mediator believes that, though Bill is having difficulty listening to Angela directly, he is hearing her indirectly, through the mediator's restatements of what she is saying.

The focus is forward looking. Each parent acknowledges that the other has an important role to play in the children's lives; neither wants to "take" the children from the other. With his fear of losing the children alleviated, Bill especially becomes less tense, and the conversation is less strained.

Bill and Angela agree to talk about parenting arrangements; at least for now, they are willing to leave the legal designations (custody) aside.

Angela and Bill talk about the children: where they attend school, what they enjoy doing, their usual routines, and so forth.

The mediator helps them to set out different possible parenting plans, which are discussed.

They talk about Christmas and New Year's, which are coming up, and which they have agreed on.

The parents reach a tentative agreement on a schedule for the children, as well as on how decisions involving medical, educational, and religious matters will be handled in the future. (The latter comes easily for them.)

DIVORCE & SEPARATION

The mediator gives each spouse a blank form for setting out financial information. Angela and Bill are both confident that they can fill in the information about their respective incomes and expenses within a week to two weeks. Both want to have another session before the Christmas holiday. If either needs more time to complete the income or expense parts of the form, they will let each other and the mediator know, so that the date of the next session can be rescheduled.

The session ends after two hours, and Bill and Angela each pay $300 of the $600 fee.

The art of saying 'no' to your child

As a parent, you want to give your children everything! But when is everything too much?

I would argue that you're giving too much — either leeway or physical objects — to your small being if he has an inability to hear “no.”

A common pitfall is when parents give their child everything he wants the moment he asks for it. This puts your kid on an express train to becoming a spoiled brat, akin to Veruca Salt of Willy Wonka fame. Remember her screeching around the room, demanding things from her father and ordering him around? Do not let this become your reality. This is not a pleasant scenario to consider, but these unfortunate transformations happen every day.

Accepting “no” is a critical skill for all children. You must teach them this so that they can be productive adults. Start saying “no” more often. The only way to learn to accept “no” is to experience it.

Proactively decide to satisfy your small being's needs, many of his wants, and some of his desires. This pattern creates a child who is balanced and embraces the world with all of its ups and downs.

Your small being accepting “no” is an art form, and it will take you some practice to be good at it, especially if your child is used to hearing “yes.” You have to stand through negotiations, ranting and raving, and possibly hitting. He may compare you to his friend's parents.

BEHAVIOR & BEYOND

Stand firm. When you decide to say “no,” stick with it.

When you stand firm, you are teaching that yelling, screaming, or hitting will not change your “no” to a “yes,” and are not acceptable forms of protest. Your child must accept your decision.

True happiness comes from working hard, accomplishing goals, and celebrating each step it took to cross the finish line. It comes from anticipating future adventures. Having all you want handed to you leads to entitlement and dissatisfaction.

As you integrate “no” into your communication, consider the following:

- Have confidence when you say “no.”
- Say “no” when you have time in case problem behavior arises while refusing a small being's request.
- Integrate “no” into scenarios where the request is possible, like ice cream for dessert, but you know it is not best.
- Practice “no” when you have a preference to uphold. For example, your small being wants to paint at the kitchen table but you would rather she color with markers.
- When you say “no,” you have to mean it! Do not change your mind.
- Pick your battles.

It is hard to see your small one disappointed or angry, but ultimately, it will be worth it. Refusing to let your child paint now is easy, but in five years, it will be much more difficult when his fighting with his teachers about doing schoolwork.

Let's stop the aspiring Verucas in their tracks. You can do this!

Optimize your fertility

Seven dos and don'ts to help women conceive

There are countless bits of advice out there on ways to get pregnant. However, from family and friends to blogs and news pieces, many of these stories are not rooted in reliable medical advice. To separate fact from fiction, we spoke with Dr. Mary Jane Minkin, Clinical Professor of Obstetrics, Gynecology, and Reproductive Sciences at Yale University School of Medicine, and asked her for specific dos and don'ts for women who want to optimize their health in order to get ready to conceive:

Alcohol: Studies focusing on alcohol's effect on conception have produced mixed results, with some indicating that pregnancy is more likely if women give up drinking entirely and others suggesting that those who drink moderately might increase their chances of conception — perhaps because an occasional glass of wine makes them more relaxed. But experts agree that women who give up alcohol will increase their chances of a healthy baby once conception does happen, and that alone is reason enough for most women to quit.

Tobacco: Unlike alcohol, the data on smoking's correlation to pregnancy is undisputed. Both primary and secondhand smoke are detrimental to a woman's chance of conceiving and to a developing fetus as well. Quitting is never easy, but you can take advantage of resources and support to help you find a plan and stick to it.

Caffeine: As the daily substance of choice for most Americans, dependency on those morning cups of coffee or afternoon soft drink is difficult to break. But even if caffeine's link to fertility isn't universally agreed upon, reputable studies exist that suggest caffeine — especially in excess — can stunt the maturation of an egg or increase the chances of a miscarriage. If giving up your morning cup of Joe can help you get pregnant, the sacrifice is worth it.

Your spot on the couch: In other words, get up and move around! Couch potatoes aren't helping any aspect of their health, but women who are trying to conceive have an extra compelling reason to kick it into high gear. Experts agree that women who stay within their ideal weight have a better chance of becoming pregnant, and a recent study by Obstetrics and Gynecology reported that women who exercise 30 minutes or more a day had a reduced risk of ovulation disorders, which often lead to infertility.

Junk food: Generally speaking, any change that moves you toward a healthier lifestyle will promote fertility. But when it comes to diet, advice seems to fall all over the map. Specific fertility diets advocate for eating foods like oysters, garlic, and yams, but an extensive 2009 study advised women to follow simpler guidelines — healthy fats, selective proteins, whole grains, and plenty of iron and other vitamins. And, obviously, putting down the potato chips and the candy bars is an excellent first step toward helping you get pregnant this year. To ensure you are getting your daily dose of necessary vitamins and folic acid, take a multivitamin like First Response

PreNatal and PostNatal Gummies or First Response Reproductive Health Gummies.

Excessive stress: Granted, this

HEALTHY LIVING

step is easier said than done, especially when the chief cause of the stress is the infertility itself. But if external factors are causing undue anxiety, a woman's chance at conception can decrease, and the stress of waiting for that positive pregnancy test month after month could be the last straw for her emotional health. Give up extra responsibilities whenever possible, talk to your boss about reducing your job stress, and work in regular "mental health" days to be refreshed by activities and people you enjoy.

Lubricants containing glycerin: According to the American Society of Reproductive Medicine's "Guidelines for Optimizing Natural Fertility," several leading vaginal lubricants (e.g. K-Y) may decrease fertility based on their observed effects on sperm survival. Another study showed that lubricants containing glycerin had an adverse effect on sperm motility.

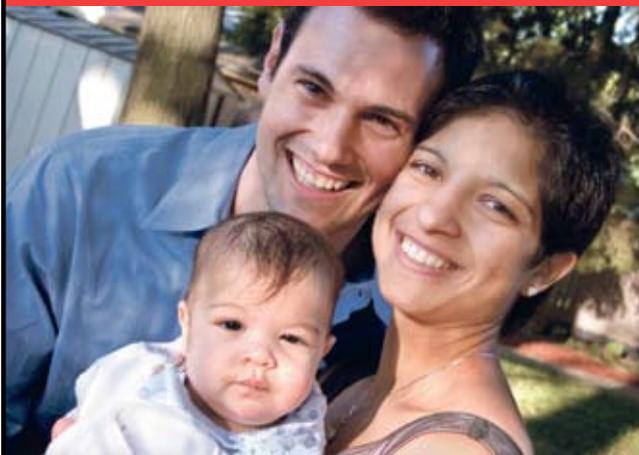

Fertility experts recommend using a fertility-friendly lubricant like Pre-Seed that is specially formulated without glycerin that will not harm sperm and will allow sperm to swim freely.

"While no checklist guarantees a healthy pregnancy, giving up these seven things can help you get pregnant. It's all about creating the ideal environment for the pregnancy to happen," says Dr. Minkin. "A healthy, happy, and active lifestyle is a solid base, and giving up the aforementioned things will get you there."

To nap or not to nap?

Variations in napping toddlers

My first daughter was a sleeper. She woke every four hours as a baby and then settled into a fairly regular routine, quickly sleeping throughout the night and taking two naps per day. Gradually, it slowed to one afternoon nap until she was about 4. My son had a similar schedule, and like his big sister, he also enjoyed sleeping. My second daughter, however, was a whole other matter.

She barely slept and scarcely ate. It was always a struggle to get her to eat enough at mealtime as a baby. Then she'd settle down for an afternoon nap only to wake up 15 minutes later. I tried to enforce nap time as long as possible, but by age 2, it just wasn't happening anymore.

Pediatrician Dr. Perry Klass has written quite a bit about the complexity of kids taking naps, and notes the process is entirely more multifaceted than most of us would ever think.

"Napping in children actually is a complex behavior, a mix of individual biology, including neurologic and hormonal development, cultural expectations and family dynamics," she says.

Infants sleep between feedings, and older babies generally take a morning and afternoon nap, which slowly whittles down to one afternoon nap. While this is the general pattern, she points out "individual children's sleep needs and sleep patterns tended to be consistent through age 10. In other words, children who slept less than their peers as infants grew into older children [who] seemed to need less sleep."

A study done by Dr. Monique LeBourgeois, a sleep scientist at the University of Colorado at Boulder, questioned how napping affects the cortisol-awakening response, which is a burst of hormone secretion that occurs shortly before waking in the morning. It showed that children produce this response after short naps in the morning and afternoon, though not in the evening, and it may be adaptive in helping children respond to the stresses of the day.

By experimentally restricting sleep in young children, and then analyzing their behavior in putting puzzles together, Dr. LeBourgeois's group quantified how napping — or the lack of it — affects the ways that children respond to situations.

"Sleepy children are not able to cope with day-to-day challenges in their worlds," she said. When children skip even a single nap, "We get less positivity, more negativity, and decreased cognitive engagement."

JUST WRITE MOM

Yet through all the sleep research, there isn't anything that can show parents exactly when a child should stop napping. When should a parent let a toddler who refuses to sleep give up her nap? When should a parent discourage a child from napping if he is approaching full-time school age?

And let's not forget the social and family issues that play a part in nap time. Sometimes, I would finally get one of my toddlers into a long nap only to have to wake them to pick up an older sibling from school. Also, many moms need a break in the day, so an afternoon nap is a matter of great importance. It helps moms recharge.

Yet often, the more we want our baby to nap, the less he will, and for some children, naps are just too difficult to do on a regular basis. My second daughter never became accustomed to taking naps, and I couldn't figure out why, but I did try as much as I could to go with the flow. I'd still try to get her to nap each day, but after a half hour, when I knew it wasn't going to happen, I just let her play quietly or thumb through a book.

Perhaps Dr. LeBourgeois sums it up best: "I think there's a dire need for adults in general to be in tune with individual children's physiology. What are the capabilities, and what are the limits? If you know your child will be stressed, cranky, and miserable without a nap, set aside time every day for that nap, but if your child starts to resist napping, another method of relaxation might be better for them."

Got nutrition?

Tips for handling picky eaters

Along with 10,000 of my colleagues, I recently attended the Food and Nutrition Conference & Expo in Boston, the world's largest annual meeting of food and nutrition professionals.

The evidence-based educational sessions covered the entire life cycle from conception to end-of-life, and there were many presentations pertaining to children and adolescents.

Digestive health was a major theme at the meeting. Probiotics and fermented products were featured at the expo. And there were educational sessions on feeding your microbiome and influencing the gut-brain highway.

Other topics included reducing plate waste in schools; where kids fit into the new 2015 Dietary Guidelines for Americans; the management of life-threatening food allergies in early childcare and school settings; food insecurity; integrating cooking and tasting activities into nutrition education programs; and the health effects of natural foods high in saturated fat, such as coconut and butter.

Let's zero in on a fascinating presentation that may be of interest if your child is an extremely "picky eater."

The topic of avoidant or restrictive food intake disorder was presented by registered dietitian nutritionist Jill Castle, creator of The Kids Healthy Weight Project (an online nutrition and feeding course for parents) and The Nourished Child Podcast.

Your child may have the disorder if she experiences the following: Refusal of foods with certain characteristics — such as wet or slippery foods — or entire food groups; poor feeding or eating skills; problems with chewing, swallowing, or choking; delayed fine motor skills; underweight; anxiety with new foods or a new eating environment; or avoids social eating situations.

Children with the disorder often suffer from constipation, iron-deficiency anemia, vitamin C and vitamin A deficiency, low bone density, delayed puberty, and slowed growth. Perhaps not surprisingly, about half of these cases co-exist with other medical conditions such as attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, obsessive-compulsive disorder, autism, anxiety, and depression.

What can you do if you are a parent or grandparent of a child you suspect has avoidant or restrictive food intake disorder? Diagnosis is made by a mental health provider and a team approach is used including a psychologist or psychiatrist, registered dietitian nutritionist, speech language pathologist, and occupational therapist.

Therapy often includes cognitive behavioral therapy, exposure and desensitization therapy, self-comfort techniques, and family-based treatment where the family takes complete ownership of the feeding process.

Nutrition therapy may include:

- Food challenges where the child is encouraged to take one bite at a meal three nights in a row, then moving on to the next food challenge.

GOOD SENSE EATING

- Food chaining (e.g. rice cake to rice cracker to Rice Krispie Treat to rice).
- Three new foods every day after school for two weeks.

- A food log of trials and the encouragement of the child to evaluate her progress.

What does not work is pressure to eat, offering rewards, and unproven special diets, i.e. gluten-free, casein-free.

Ultimately, the goal is to provide the child with food courage, eating confidence, and a meaningful acceptance of food.

Christine M. Palumbo, a registered dietitian nutritionist and Fellow of the American Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics, practices in Naperville, Ill. She has firsthand experience with avoidant or restrictive food intake disorder with a young family member who is still "working on" his feeding skills. Giving back

Opportunities for kids to volunteer in New York City

BY SHNIEKA L. JOHNSON

The winter holiday season is the perfect time to involve the whole family in giving back to your local community. Make it known to your children that it's not only adults that can lend a hand, but rather, kids who can be just as involved in making a difference in someone's life. This is an empowering message to instill early in life, having children take ownership of their community and make a difference whether it is direct or indirect.

Many local organizations are looking for assistance year-round, such as nursing homes, nonprofit organizations, or animal shelters. Your location, child's age, and interests will be a factor in the decision-making for a family volunteer project during the winter holidays. If you are seeking ideas for what your family or group of friends can do, here are a few examples:

Feed a family

Many members of our local communities struggle to put food on their tables regularly. Collect non-perishable foods to donate to a local organization. Your donations can help to keep shelves stocked at area soup kitchens, food pantries, and other community food programs.

By running a food drive with your family or group of friends, you'll help provide many New Yorkers with good food that they normally would not have.

Give gifts

The winter months can be difficult for families and individuals living in New York City. Maybe the cold weather caused high heating bills or an illness such as a cold or flu resulted in missed work. Any number of things can affect income and cause holiday gifts to be cut from the budget.

By shopping for and delivering gifts to those in need, you and your family can bring more cheer to children and families who may not otherwise receive holiday gifts.

Start a coat drive

We all know what it's like to be cold for short periods of time, but imagine no chance of getting warm due to a lack of appropriate winter gear. Help ensure that every New Yorker stays warm, healthy, and safe over this winter by hosting a coat drive. Your family, group of friends, colleagues, or even your child's school, can run a coat drive.

There are always so many opportunities to volunteer around the city. A number of community resources help make it easy to find a program or organization to support. Given your family make up, your volunteer project can range by location or interest, but big or small, you are making a difference.

More ideas

Don't know where to begin? Here are a few organizations that can give you a start:

City Harvest: City Harvest is the world's first food rescue organization, dedicated to feeding hungry New Yorkers. The organization has served New Yorkers for more than 30 years. Visit www.cityharvest.org to find out more on how to donate or volunteer.

Doing Good Together: This Minnesota-based organization aims to help parents raise compassionate and socially conscious children through family volunteerism. It was founded on the belief that when parents engage with their children in community service, they pass along the spirit of giving. For New Yorkers, www.doinggoodtogether.org/family-volunteering-nyc offers listings and information on family-friendly volunteer and service opportunities in the metro area.

New York Cares: New York Cares

runs vital programs for nonprofits, public schools, and city agencies to help people in need throughout the five boroughs. Since 1987, New York Cares has made it easy for all New Yorkers to work together to strengthen the city. Getting started is easy: just attend orientation, then you can search and sign up for any project. Visit www.newyorkcares.org.

No Kid Hungry: This organization works hard to make sure no kid in America grows up hungry by collaborating with community groups, activists, and food programs. The goal is to identify children facing hunger and surround them with nutritious food where they live, learn, and play. Visit www.nokidhungry.org.

Toys For Tots: This organization collects and distributes toys to families in need. You and your family can help in your community by collecting new, unwrapped toys to be distributed. Your donations will serve as Christmas gifts to less fortunate children in the community. The primary goal of Toys for Tots is to deliver, through a new toy at Christmas, a message of hope to less fortunate youngsters that will assist them in becoming responsible, productive, patriotic citizens.
